The Ethiopian Journal of Business and Economics

The Ethiopian Journal of Business and Economics (EJBE - E-ISSN: 2410-2393 Print ISSN: 2311-9772) is a biannual peer-reviewed publication of the College of Business and Economics, Addis Ababa University. It seeks to encourage thinking among academics, practitioners and policy makers in the fields of Accounting and Finance, Economics, Business Management, and Public Administration and Development Management. Equally important, its main mission is to stimulate research-based and inter- and multi-disciplinary debate on the issues involving the four fields particularly as these pertain to the Ethiopian setting and development challenges. EJBE publishes research reports, book reviews, and Master's thesis and PhD dissertation (abridged versions or chapters). Academic articles and other publishable works from related disciplines are also welcome. EJBE is an authoritative and refereed journal.

Emerging Markets Journal

EMAJ (Print: 2159-242X; Online: 2158-8708) is a free, online and print, open access, peer-reviewed journal of business management published by the University Library System, University of Pittsburgh, cosponsored by University of Pittsburgh Press. EMAJ aims to publish empirical research that extends or builds management theory and contributes to management practice with a special focus on emerging markets. All empirical methods including, but not limited to, qualitative, quantitative, field, and combination methods are welcome. To be published in EMAJ, a manuscript must make strong empirical and theoretical contributions and highlight the significance of those contributions to the business management field. Preference is given to submissions that test, extend, or build strong theoretical frameworks while empirically examining issues with high importance for business management theory and practice. All manuscripts will be subject to a rigorous peer review by a distinguished review panel, composed of internationally knowledgeable experts and specialists.

African Journal of Economic Policy

The primary aim of this journal, an offshoot of the Trade Policy Research and Training Programme in Economics Department, University of Ibadan, is to provide a forum for development and equity on the African continent. It, therefore, welcomes well researched papers on the implications of a specific economic policy or a set of economic policies for growth, development and equity within individual African countries, group of African countries and the continent as a whole. Taking due cognizance of the fact that Africa is a member of the world community, the economic policy issues need not be limited to those undertaken within the continent. As such, articles focusing on the implications of policies undertaken by African governments (individually and/or collectively); governments of other nations (individually or collectively); multilateral institutions; multinational corporations; intergovernmental organizations; and non-governmental organizations for growth, development and equity on the African continent are cordially invited. The ultimate intention is to continuously sharpen the focus of all concerned on the efficacy of the various economic policies on the welfare of Africans regardless of who might be undertaking them.

Wroclaw Review of Law, Administration & Economics

The semi-annual "Wroclaw Review of Law, Administration and Economics" is addressed to all those interested in the subjects of the legal cultures, administrative systems and economies of New Europe. The journal's subject matter is centred on the point of contact of three disciplines which history and pragmatics have bound together tightly. In a broad sense, it is an English-language periodical dedicated to the issues of globalization and transformation expressed simultaneously from the legal, administrative and economic perspectives. Similarly to the city of Wroclaw, regarded as a symbolic junction and a place of penetration of various cultures and traditions, this journal is one of meetings; a publication that unites and is intended to serve the exchange of academic thought that characterises the heritage of both the East and the West, with an emphasis on knowledge of central and eastern European legal, administrative and economic systems. For this reason the proposed research perspective takes into account both the Polish body of academic work and an international/comparative perspective, at present quite strongly represented in the research and teaching conducted at the Wrocław University Faculty of Law, Administration and Economics where the idea of founding the new journal was born. The ambition of the Wrocław Review, within the framework given above, is to open its pages to new areas of activity in law, administration and economics that are the result of transformations in the modern world and in particular societies, but also in the liberal arts, the hard sciences and medicine. Such sources of inspiration, intended to lead to new perspectives on research problems and conclusions flowing from their exploration, are to characterise the functioning of the journal from the very beginning.

Public Policy and Administration

Aims and scope of the academic journal Public Policy and Administration: to encourage scientific research aimed at finding new theoretical and practical solutions for the formation and implementation of public policy; to analyze current trends in public administration and suggest new alternatives for decision making and implementation for public administration practice; to pay special attention to the analysis and critical evaluation of the processes of public administration in Eastern and Central Europe; to contribute to the improvement of the research methodology in the field of public policy; to ensure effective dissemination of scientific knowledge by publishing relevant up-to-date studies and conference reviews. The journal includes articles analyzing theoretical and practical issues in the areas of public policy and administration in Central and Eastern Europe. Priority is given to articles analyzing transformational processes and reform management in Ukraine, Belarus, Russia, Latvia, Poland, the Czech Republic, good practices of these countries, current issues in the formation and implementation of public policy in Lithuania and, among them, the developments in the public administration reform and the implementation of European Union standards. Of particular interest are institutional and functional issues in EU governance, regional development of knowledge society, managerial competencies of public servants and ethical problems. The journal also reviews conferences, books, and events of interest to the fields of public policy and administration. Most journals in the field focus on either public policy or public administration, while the defining feature of our journal is that it publishes analyses on both of these dimensions of public governance. The quarterly journal Public Policy and Administration is international and multidisciplinary. It includes theoretical articles by internationally renowned scholars as well as studies of the practical aspects of public governance. Pieces of research published in this journal are based on the application of various methods from diverse fields, such as management, sociology, economics, philosophy, history and law.
